Afghanistan Eyes Alternate Routes for Global Trade

President Ashraf Ghani has vowed to shift 80 percent of country’s international trade with Europe towards the new route that passes through Central Asian states and Turkey.

KABUL - Afghanistan has long complained about persistent delays in shipments via Iran and Pakistan caused by political uncertainty and alleged manipulations to force powerful neighbors to safeguard their own trade interests in the war-torn country. President Ashraf Ghani has served as the World Bank and coordinated a globally accepted model to rebuild broken states, promised his countrymen. Given his latest public address that he would achieve the same within his term in office, "Well writing, without threat from civil war, from now on, the Afghan Route will link us to the continent of Europe, the United States and Turkey," the president said.

The route is named after a previous generation Afghan traders who had enjoyed full control over Afghanistan’s global trade. Ghani said neighbors should not feel threatened by this move. "This creates an opening that we can use as well," he said.

There is already an international document (MOU) for the project.

KABUL - In fresh development, a two-member Afghan delegation visited China where the former government held discussions with Chinese officials, sources said. A leading Pakistan diplomat accused the Qureshi-led government in Pakistan of "choosing" the China-Lahore railway instead of the Kabul-Torkham line. The delegation, the sources said, had discussed issues pertaining to Afghanistan and the latest political situation in the region. It also quoted the AIP for Afghan-Chinese relations. However, no specific bilateral agenda was highlighted by the delegations, it was informed. Sources said that thinking about China’s role in Europe in the case of Afghanistan and kick-start the stalled recognition process. Quoting an unnamed official, the paper said it would be more in line with the overall policy.
