Cabinet to be Named Today: Mohammadri

KARUL - President Mohammad Ashraf Ghani's Legal Advisor Abdul Ali Mohammad on Sunday said the new cabinet would be announced today (Monday). He told reporters in Kabul that some people wanted to impose the nomination of unqualified individuals as cabinet members on the president, who recently resigned last month. Mohammadri said selection of qualified and talented individuals as ministers was in line with the constitution. The basic law would be violated if qualified people were not included in the cabinet, he explained.

So far Ghani had been under immense pressure from different quarters to include certain individuals in the Council of Ministers, the advisor admitted. The president - (More on Pn 12)

A Shift in Taliban's Resolve Might Crystalize Peace Talks

By Amnaetak

Afghans have been longing for eternal peace for decades. After a recent string of insurrections and terrorist attacks, many Afghans appear to be supportive of a peace process. Former prime minister Rabbani, who has been critical of the Taliban's activities, has found that 70% of Afghans would be anxious to accept a resolution by means of a political solution. The Taliban themselves have been discussing the possibility of a political solution, with multiple factors hindering this way to the peace. The new insight suggests that the Taliban, who have been previously opposed to a political solution, might be willing to engage in negotiations.

Peace talks

The recent surge in violence, including the recent suicide attack in Kabul, suggests that the Taliban might be considering a political solution. The Afghan government has also been emphasizing the need for a political solution to end the conflict. The United Nations has also been working towards a political solution, with the aim of bringing about a lasting peace in Afghanistan.

Peace talks

The Afghan government has been calling for a political solution, and has been engaged in negotiations with the Taliban. The Taliban, on the other hand, have also been discussing the possibility of a political solution, with multiple factors hindering this way to the peace. U.S. Supreme Court to weigh new religious rights case

The Supreme Court on Monday heard oral arguments in a religious rights case when it considered whether the city of Azurea discriminated against a local church by refusing to notify the public of its plan to build a new building. The justices are set to decide on whether the city had made a mistake in an appeal filed by the church, which objected to the city's plan to build a new building. The church claimed its free exercise of religion would be violated. The conservative-leaning court's last decision on the subject came in 1962.

Merkel Urges Putin, Poroshenko to Implement Peace Plan

BERLIN - German Chanceller Angela Merkel has told Russian President Vladimir Putin and Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko that they need to take “immediate and four-way steps” to implement a peace plan if there’s a chance of making progress.

The leaders of Germany, France, Russia, and Ukraine are working on getting the four-way meeting in Astana, Kazakhstan, back on track.

But Merkel’s office said late Saturday that it had started talking with Putin and Poroshenko about how to make the discussions “constructive” and to move forward.

The talks will take place over the next few days, with the possibility of an informal meeting in September.

However, it is unclear if the four leaders will agree on new measures to end the conflict.

Turky Ready to Cooperate with the U.S.

ANKARA - Turkish Prime Minister Ahmet Davutoglu said Turkey is ready to cooperate with the U.S. on a wide range of issues.

In a joint statement with American Secretary of State John Kerry, Davutoglu said Turkey is ready to cooperate on the issues of terrorism, security, and stability.

He also expressed Turkey’s commitment to supporting the U.S. in its fight against the Islamic State.

The meeting comes as relations between Turkey and the U.S. have improved in recent months.
