Pakistan Using Terrorism as Policy Tool, Claims Karzai

KARAIL - Stability will continue to struggle as long as Pakistan did not stop using terrorism as a policy tool, Prime Minister Rami Karzai said Wednesday. Karzai cited America's decision to conduct a major offensive against all militants without any distinction following the Pakistan air attack.

Last month's Taliban assault on the Afghan National Army's 2nd Division left 14 soldiers dead and nearly 200 others wounded, sparking out outrage from international onlookers.

However, the ex-president said there had been no perceivable change in Pakistan's counter-terrorism policy so far. Although civil leaders desired security in the region, they were powerless, he claimed.

"When Pakistan steps using terror as a weapon," the Prime Minister said, "the tumor might come to an end. The situation will improve automatically." The former president warned.

 Asked why Kabul-American ties remained tense and difficult, Karzai replied: "Pakistan wanted a relationship that protected its own interests. They asked Afghanistan to accommodate its sovereignty."

However, he added: "We need to improve relations with Pakistan. An independent country, Afghanistan will determine sovereignty with the neighbor.

He also took a swipe at the US for having allowed Afghan high and high-end for the Soviets without diverging, saying: "In more or less three years, 100,000 American troops served in Iraq and Afghanistan. Today, fewer than 50,000 remain." Pointing to its recent efforts of bringing the Afghan war to an acceptable era, the Prime Minister declared that the Afghan Nation Security Forces (ANSF) have been trained well during the past 10 years.

Obama Insists Fewer Troops in Afghanistan

WASHINGTON - America is ending its combat mission in Afghanistan, United States President Barack Obama on Wednesday ordered all the US combat troops out of the country.

"Tonight, for the first time since 9/11, our combat mission in Afghanistan is over," Obama said. "Six years ago, just 18,000 American troops served in Iraq in Afghanistan. Today, fewer than 50,000 remain." Pointing to its recent efforts of bringing the Afghan war to a more acceptable era, the President declared that the Afghan Nation Security Forces (ANSF) have been trained well during the past 10 years.
