Emergence of 1919 in Afghanistan is a Fear Propaganda!

By Muhammad Razak Shah

The increasing news of the emergence of ISIS in Afghanistan is a fear propaganda. In the wake of the Taliban’s recent advances, the Islamic State has been gaining a foothold in Afghanistan, with bases in the eastern and southern provinces. The group has been exploiting the chaos and instability in the country, exploiting the situation to its advantage.

In the same way, many things can be found on Internet and social networking sites. Facebook, YouTube, and Twitter as many validateable prop aganda can be found on these sites. It is a fact that the ISIS propaganda team is using these sites to spread its message and recruit new members.

The TTP is also using these sites to spread its message and recruit new members. The group has been using social media platforms to spread its ideology and recruit new members.

The government needs to be more vigilant and take appropriate measures to prevent the spread of this propaganda. The government should also work closely with international partners to combat this threat.

Afghanistan-US Relationship Revitalized

by Zamir Jan

President Ashraf Ghani has made a visit to the United States to meet with President Joe Biden and to discuss the future of Afghanistan. The visit is seen as a significant step towards a possible reconciliation with the Taliban and a peaceful transition of power.

In addition, the visit is also a key moment for the revival of the Afghanistan-US relationship, which has been strained due to the ongoing conflict.

The talks are expected to focus on the future of the military presence in Afghanistan, the countering of terrorism, and the economic development of the country.

In conclusion, the visit is seen as a significant step towards a possible reconciliation with the Taliban and a peaceful transition of power.
warren someone has to be the boss of the country, and if that person is not the president, it will be the prime minister. The president has the power to suspend the prime minister, and the prime minister has the power to suspend the president. This system allows for a balance of power between the two branches of government.

The president is also responsible for appointing the cabinet, which consists of the heads of the various government departments. The cabinet is responsible for implementing the policies of the government and for ensuring that the laws of the country are carried out. The president can also dissolve the parliament and call for new elections if the government is unable to pass legislation or if there is a threat to the stability of the country.

The president is also the commander-in-chief of the armed forces, and is responsible for appointing the minister of defense. The president is also the head of state and has a ceremonial role, representing the country at home and abroad.

Finally, the president is also responsible for the administration of justice, and is the final arbiter in cases where the courts are unable to reach a decision. The president can also grant pardons and amnesties to individuals who have been convicted of crimes.

In summary, the presidential system of government is characterized by a strong executive branch, with the president as the head of state and government. The president has a significant degree of power, and is able to make decisions without the need for legislative approval. The president is also able to hold office for a long time, and is not limited by term limits.

In conclusion, the presidential system of government is a good model for a democratic country that values individual rights and freedoms. It is a system that is able to respond quickly to changing circumstances, and is able to adapt to the needs of the country.

However, the presidential system also has its limitations. The president is often seen as the ultimate authority, and is able to make decisions without the need for consultation with others. This can lead to a lack of accountability and transparency, and can also lead to corruption and abuse of power.

Therefore, it is important for a presidential system to have strong checks and balances, and to have a parliament that is able to hold the government accountable. This can be achieved through a system of checks and balances, such as a strong judiciary or an independent auditor.
