Four Tajik Border Guards Held Hostage Not Released

Tajik border guards who were being held hostage in Afghanistan, have not yet been released, following the crisis in the northern region of the Tajikistan border with Afghanistan. According to U.S. officials, the hostages were reportedly held by Northern Alliance fighters. The hosts have accused Afghan officials of failing to negotiate for their release or provide any information about their whereabouts. The situation remains tense, and the U.S. is calling for immediate action to release the hostages. The Afghan government has denied involvement, stating that the hostages are being held by local warlords and not by the government. The hostage crisis has caused significant strain on relations between the U.S. and Afghanistan, as it raises questions about the role of warlords in the country's security and stability. The situation continues to be closely monitored by both the U.S. and international partners.

Libya Talks Resume, U.N. Plays Down Absence of a Major Player

NEW DELHI - U.S.-led talks between New Saudi Arabia, King Saud bin Abdulaziz, and a rebel government in Tripoli aimed at discussing a joint inventory of U.S. and Libyan military units in Libya and the fighting going on in the country.

Libya has been divided into two main areas since the civil war began in 2011, with the Tripoli government being backed by Western powers and the rebels in the east with support from the U.S. and other countries. The talks are expected to address the situation in the country and the future of the government.

The talks are being held in New York on Saturday and are expected to last for three days. The main issues are expected to include the situation in the eastern part of the country, which is controlled by the Tripoli government, and the future of the government in Tripoli.

The talks are expected to be attended by representatives from the Tripoli government, the rebels in the east, and international organizations.

Eurasia - Greek Leftist Tsipras Sworn in As PM to Fight Bailout Terms

In Greek, leftist Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras was sworn in as prime minister on Saturday, replacing conservative former Prime Minister Antonis Samaras, who resigned earlier in the week.

Tsipras, who led a coalition government that was rejected by Greek voters in a general election last month, has vowed to renegotiate Greece's bailout terms with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the European Union (EU).

Tsipras has been given three months to form a government and implement the terms of the bailout, which will provide Greece with €85 billion ($111 billion) over three years.

The terms of the bailout include structural reforms, including cuts to public spending and pensions, and increased tax revenue.

Tsipras has said he will not implement the reforms and has called for a referendum on the terms of the bailout.

China, Turkey Vow Cooperation on Counterterrorism

BRUSSELS - China and Turkey have vowed to cooperate on counterterrorism, with the two countries agreeing to strengthen their relations in the fight against extremism.

The decision comes after a meeting between Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi and his Turkish counterpart, Mevlut Cavusoglu, in which they discussed ways to counter radicalization and extremism.

The two countries are expected to work together on a range of issues, including the sharing of information about suspects and the establishment of joint committees to monitor the situation.

The cooperation between China and Turkey is seen as important in the fight against terrorism in the region, with both countries facing challenges from extremist groups.
