What is the Solution? The Assault on the West

By Hajjehlilah Zita

The escalating propensity of radical ideologies for violence is a problem that has been subjected to the rule of law... across the world. The genocidal acts of the Islamic State are just one manifestation. It is a tragedy of war that international communities should be aware of the rise of these types of groups.

The inherent and irrevocable rights of nations are violated gravely. Western nations uphold and defend these rights and are compelled to intervene. America's military actions have been responsible for much of the harm done.

The current configuration, which exists in this brutal arena, is a battle against the forces of evil and for the sake of justice. The aim is to eliminate those who perpetrate such crimes and to ensure a just and lasting peace.

The generation and future generations of our societies will inherit the peace that has been established through the efforts of previous generations. We mustn't overlook the importance of this peace and the challenges we face in maintaining it.

The United States, under the leadership of President Barack Obama, has taken a significant step toward ending the conflict in Afghanistan. Obama's announcement last week that the United States would withdraw its military forces from Afghanistan by the end of 2016 is a positive development.
