Number of Drug Addicts Increases in Daulandi

NEILU - A seminar at the central Daulandi College, Mitra Hassan, travelled to his 10-year-old boys 8 years back, but returned as drug addict. Instead of supporting his family, he has become a burden. Narrating his ordeal, Hassan told how his 8-year-old son Afzal is now an heroin addict, whose owner provided him option to seek extra loans. With the passage of time, said, "I felt it grow into a chronic add"

The youth complained, "There is no similar production, much less the creative mind. We used to develop our own lazy, but like the extreme addiction, I don’t feel that the only daughter has rejected me, so no talk to me in a decent manner. He irritated his own son, instead of a man and told it was recommended the police.

"I have been under treatment at rehabilitation center, said to the provincial capital city, Ch. Subohul Hadian, in charge of rest..."

Supporting Women’s Rights in World Politics

By Muhammad Riazuddin Shafi

The novelty of women’s issues begins to tail and the back- burnered phrases of rape and violence can no more raise public ire. Now the agendas of these issues are being taken on by the major powers of the world. Without a doubt, the issues of women are also a part of this agenda. As women’s rights and gender equality are promoted, the number of reports concerning violence against women is increasing. This is a positive sign because it indicates that women’s issues are now being taken seriously.

The International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women is observed on 25 November. It is a day for global commitment to eliminate gender violence. The theme for this year’s International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women is “From Peace in the Home to Peace in the World: Ending Gender Violence Today for Tomorrow’s Peace.”

This day is observed to raise awareness about the prevention and elimination of violence against women and girls. It is an opportunity to reflect on the progress that has been made and the challenges that still remain. The day is also an occasion to highlight the importance of women’s rights and gender equality.

Violence against women is a global issue that affects millions of people worldwide. It is a human rights violation that must be addressed. The United Nations has set the goal of ending all forms of violence against women and girls by 2030. This goal is part of the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and is linked to several other goals.

In this context, it is important to recognize the role of the United Nations in promoting women’s rights and gender equality. The UN has been instrumental in setting norms and standards for women’s rights, as well as providing guidance and support to countries in their efforts to promote gender equality. The UN has also been actively involved in promoting and monitoring the implementation of the SDGs, including Goal 5 on gender equality.

However, despite these efforts, gender-based violence remains a serious problem in many parts of the world. Women and girls are at risk of violence in all types of settings, including in their homes, schools, and workplaces. This violence can take many forms, including physical, sexual, emotional, and economic abuse.

It is important to recognize that violence against women is not a private matter, but a public one. It is a matter of human rights and must be addressed in a holistic way. This requires action at the individual, community, and national levels. At the individual level, it is important to raise awareness about the signs and symptoms of violence against women and girls. At the community level, it is important to create safe spaces and support networks for women and girls who have experienced violence.

At the national level, it is important to adopt and implement policies and laws that promote gender equality and protect women and girls from violence. This includes laws that criminalize violence against women, provide access to justice, and ensure that victims have the support they need.

In conclusion, violence against women is a global crisis that requires urgent action. The United Nations and its partners have made significant progress in promoting women’s rights and gender equality. However, more needs to be done to ensure that all women and girls have the opportunity to live free from violence and discrimination. This requires a commitment from all of us, at all levels, to work towards a world where women and girls are safe and valued.

China’s Positive Role in World Politics

The Chinese government has played an important role in promoting gender equality and women’s rights. China has made significant progress in eliminating gender-based violence and discrimination. The country has implemented laws and policies to protect women’s rights and promote gender equality. This includes the establishment of a national gender equality committee, which is responsible for coordinating and implementing gender equality policies.

China has also taken steps to increase women’s participation in politics, education, and economic life. The country has implemented laws and policies to ensure equal opportunities for women in these areas. For example, the country has implemented laws to ensure that women have equal access to education and employment opportunities.

In addition, China has taken steps to increase women’s participation in decision-making processes. The country has implemented laws and policies to ensure that women have equal representation in government and civil society organizations. This includes the establishment of women’s representative bodies and the implementation of gender quotas in political appointments.

China has also taken steps to promote women’s health and well-being. The country has implemented laws and policies to ensure access to reproductive health services and to combat gender-based violence. This includes the implementation of laws to criminalize violence against women and to provide access to justice for victims of violence.

In conclusion, China’s positive role in promoting gender equality and women’s rights is a testament to the country’s commitment to human rights and gender equality. The country’s efforts in this area are an example for other countries to follow. It is important for all countries to take steps to promote gender equality and protect women’s rights, as this is essential for the achievement of sustainable development and for building a more just and equitable world.

The inevitability of Drowning Rain Water!

Just last year, many areas of the city once again turned into lakes and rivers. Now, the geographical boundaries of nature and man are blurred; the rains are not continuous and cease as soon as it is last year, otherwise, the season will be called a severe drought. In rainy season, there are roads blocked by this seepage water and a number of cars got blocked in the water and it became a common sight to see the traffic jam of roads that came under the threat of destruction and collapse due to the permanent stay of this rain water. The residents of Hayatabad Project and a number of other areas in the city were in frustration after the rains. Just like the previous years, the city municipality once again took up the old story of remedying the water with seepage water dumping tanks. Thanks to the limited funds, this business has been started on a very small scale because of the amount of capital requirement.

Last year as well, a number of houses had collapsed in some parts of the city after heavy rainfall and when the seepage water remained on roads and streets for many days. At that time, some problems were raised in these pages and solutions were suggested. However, for some serious efforts were not taken and the problem still remains awaits a permanent solution.

To understand the nature of this problem, we may have to go back to the days when the city started expanding rapidly due to the lack of a proper authority and planning, our proper attention was given on the long-term needs of the city. The city of Lahore was once a paradise, it used to have millions of trees, the roads wide, the houses reasonable, roads and other public infrastructures also were in good condition. On the other hand, the stagnant corruption in the construction of roads and other public infrastructures also aggravated the situation.

The roads were built and a weak network of seepage tanks were also constructed but they were not prevent strong efforts and proper planning to avoid these due to which these efforts were never completed. At present, majority of these tanks are broken or filled with waste or other solid waste and in fact, there is no representation of proper drainage of rain water from the city. It is also evident in the fact that the city is heavily flooded after the rainfall in any year. Even worse, in the same houses, in the residents of Khulna also obtain the services of these seepage tanks in this regard, they have fixed tube-well machines. This direct water can be called the most dam- ning condition in the city, and it is not a different thing from the process of irrigation of the sewage water being dumped near the same road.

Furthermore, it is the responsibility of the government and people of the society to improve the cleanliness and quality of life of the citizens and the lack of attention to this issue can cause severe consequences. Therefore, it is necessary to have a proper system of drainage in the city to avoid this problem in the future.
