No Government in Absence of Cabinet

KARUL - Members of Parliament criticized the National Unity Government leaders who, in their words, have shown a lack of leadership by delaying the announcement of the remaining ministerial nominees for the cabinet, claiming that with an incomplete government the MPs have no work.

Many of the MPs have described the Parliament as a “cold environment,” as several of them do not show up for work because there is no agenda.

During their Monday session, MPs called on the government to begin acting as leaders and review the needs of the people, threats, poverty, and unemployment otherwise the gap between the people and the... (More on P4-5)

Govt. Indict to Hasten Recovery of Hazara Abductees

War in a society where leaders have been almost completely eclipsed, might be the antithesis of responsible governance and corruption, legal code to each to so-called socio-political friction. Apparently, the government, some say, is trying to exaggerate the whole issue of abduction, abduction and concerns authorities to look after the entire affairs of the state, while facilitating the undertaking of ordinary issues. Nonetheless, the deeper implication of failing civic to the concerns of aggrieved; murdered and kidnapped citizens' worth appliance who even died out to condemn this cowardly incident by stirring the grievances of abducted families. As days pass by, the anxiety and apprehensions of Hazara deepens who are left jettisoning their beloved ones. Therefore, in the world every individual counts and are valued, in contrast to any other nation don't dare...

Earlier, around 34 Hazara passengers were kidnapped after identity check by unknown masked men on Kahan-Kabul highway. The incident took place in Shikar far west district of southern Zakho province wherein the armed men drove away 31 passengers to Khal. Since then there has been no report about the fate and whereabouts of the poor abducted passengers. It is the responsibility of the government within a state to ensure peace and security of its citizens. However, the governments that suffer from administrative insufficiencies fail to guarantee security. And in such states the weaker section of the society tends to suffer the most. Women, ethnic and religious minorities and the common people as a whole undergo an uphill struggle. As a result, in Pakistan at one part of the country, the government has not been able to provide enough security to the people and the common people face different sorts of problems every day. This clearly shows the level of insecurity in the country. Some armed men took passengers vehicles, identified certain people and took them to some unknown place without any difficulty. And the most unfortunate fact is that there is no confirmed reports about who abducted them and where they are. It is very often that in the absence of the abducted Hazara women, the local community leaders along with religious leaders and women rights organizations step in and try to find the difference for Hazara women are often the target of sectarian violence at the hands of extremists in Afghanistan. Hazara women are often subjected to be raped by Taliban or Hekmatyar faction members.

In the absence of the abducted women, the local leaders and women rights organizations step in and try to find their whereabouts, but the authorities seem calm and did not show any reaction against the incident for they belong to the people and are not the interest of the government. However, if it was decided to report such reports to the government, it did not come across to the authorities. Therefore, certain government officials and authorities seem calm and did not show any reaction against the incident.

EU Seeks Ways to Back Libya Peace Talks

BRUSSELS - The European Union sought ways to support the Libyan government as it seeks to prevent a boycott by the world community at a crucial peace conference this week.

"We've got to establish a cease-fire and get people to sit down and talk about a peaceful solution," said the European Union's foreign policy chief, Madame Catherine Ashton.

"We're not yet at the stage of a political process," she said, "but we have the potential to be.

"We have to keep the pressure on all sides. It's in the interest of everyone to have a political process to end the conflict in Libya.

Last year the world community was unable to agree on a political process and now the situation in Libya has deteriorated to a point where the European Union has suggested that it is time to move towards a political process.

The EU has proposed the establishment of a political process in Libya, which could include a national conference, a constitutional assembly, and a national unity government, to be followed by elections.

The proposed approach to Libya is based on the idea that political solutions are necessary to end the conflict and to build a stable and prosperous future for the Libyan people.

There have been discussions with Libyan leaders, including the head of the Libyan National Army, Gen. Khalifa Haftar, on the possibility of a political process.

The EU's approach is seen as a significant step towards a political solution to the conflict in Libya, and it is hoped that it will lead to a peaceful solution to the crisis.
Canada’s Afghan Aid Program was Flawed, Audit Concludes

TOOTSAH, Canada—Canada walked away from a decade-long $2.2 billion military engagement in Afghanistan with most of its citizens hoping the U.S. would not carry on with it’s plan, an internal government audit has found.

Instead, Canada’s vision was torn in the dust, officials are suggesting new auditors looking into the large, complex and protracted history, one of the three federal government programs in the war-torn country, after the fall of the Taliban in 2001.

The massive aid program was based on the notion that Canada’s spending could work in securing the country and diplomatic efforts to shore up the government, a whole-of-government approach which in retrospect should have served as a model for Afghanistan.

EU Renews Pledge Not to Leave Afghanistan Alone

KARUL, The European Union’s (EU) Monday renewed its commitment to continuously supporting the country and not leaving Afghanistan alone. This was stated by Stefan Hadzic, the acting head of the EU delegation, at a meeting with Prime Minister Zulfiqar Ali Bhutto in Kabul.

He said the EU would continue to support the unity government and would not leave the Afghans alone.
