The Fight for Winning Hearts and Minds

By Abdul Ahad Balandin

E electing large numbers of Afghan leaders and military officers to the Loya Jirga and the newly elected government to take their oaths of office in the presence of the United Nations Security Council has been a significant step towards ending the civil war and establishing a democratic government in Afghanistan. The Loya Jirga was held in Kabul on April 24 and was attended by representatives from all parts of the country, including the Taliban. The new government has been endorsed by the United Nations and is expected to be recognized as the legitimate government of Afghanistan by most countries.

The new government has been tasked with implementing a range of policies to address the challenges facing the country, including improving security, addressing economic problems, and promoting human rights. The Taliban, who have been in control of much of the country for the past eight years, have been excluded from the new government, but efforts are being made to engage with them and work towards a political solution to the conflict.

Despite these developments, the situation in Afghanistan remains precarious. The country is still grappling with the aftermath of years of war, and the new government will need to overcome significant challenges in order to stabilize the country and ensure a peaceful future. The international community will need to provide support and assistance to the new government to help it achieve its goals.

In conclusion, the establishment of the new government in Afghanistan is a significant step towards ending the civil war and promoting peace and stability in the country. However, much work remains to be done to ensure that the country can move forward on a path of prosperity and progress. The international community will need to continue to support and assist the new government in its efforts to achieve this goal.

Negotiation Alongside Operation Works

W e should not let the peace process be the only way to solve the problems in Afghanistan. The government needs to take strong and effective action against the Taliban and other insurgent groups to ensure the security of the people. The government has been making progress in negotiations, but we must not rely solely on this approach. We must also continue to work on military operations to bring about a lasting peace.

The recent move of the Taliban to negotiate with the Afghan government is a positive development. However, we should not be complacent and allow the Taliban to gain any upper hand. We must continue to put pressure on them and ensure that they do not gain any advantage.

The Afghan government and the international community need to work together to support the peace process and ensure that it leads to a lasting and inclusive peace. We must also continue to support the Afghan security forces in their efforts to defeat the Taliban and other insurgent groups.

In conclusion, we must continue to work on both the peace process and military operations to bring about a lasting peace in Afghanistan. We must not rely solely on the peace process and must continue to put pressure on the Taliban and other insurgent groups to ensure that they do not gain any upper hand. We must continue to support the Afghan security forces in their efforts to defeat the Taliban and other insurgent groups, and work together with the international community to support the peace process and ensure that it leads to a lasting and inclusive peace.

Recent increase in the influence and power of Taliban in a number of provinces and districts indicates that the government and its forces (including US, ISAF and Afghan Security forces) have failed to take necessary action against the Taliban. For instance, in the recent forces and Taliban's coordinated attacks on our forces, the government and its forces have failed to provide necessary support and assistance to the Afghan Security forces. This has led to the situation where the Taliban are able to gain control of a number of districts and provinces, including western and northern parts of the country.

In conclusion, the government and its forces need to take necessary action against the Taliban to prevent them from gaining control of more districts and provinces in the country. The government and its forces need to work together with the international community to support the Afghan Security forces in their efforts to defeat the Taliban and other insurgent groups.
