Gen. Murad Ali Murad
Afghan Soil Won’t Be Used Against Neighboring States

KARUL -- Gen. Murad Ali Murad, Deputy army chief, on Wednesday reiterated Afghan soil would never al- low its soil to be used against neighboring or regional countries. Speaking at a graduation ceremony of 300 Afghan commanders in Kabul, the general said those responsi- ble for firing war crimes in Afghanistan and the region should be identified.

"The international communi- ty should know what the war criminals have done in Afghanistan. And they could do the same if they get the chance," he warned.

The war on terror, he added, started back in 2001 and was still not over. The fight to eliminate the terror should reach to the hokums of ter- ritories, he added.

"We have urged the global community. (More on P.12)

Afghanistan’s Drugs Crisis

U.S.-backed study concluded that there are now more than three million drug users in Afghanistan, up from 1.6 million in 2012. Against this backdrop, Afghanistan is one of the top opium-producing countries in the world, and it produces more than 10 percent of the world’s heroin, according to the U.S. Office of National Drug Control Policy. A new study by the U.S. government’s National Institute on Drug Abuse indicates that the number of drug users in Afghanistan has more than doubled since 2007.

The study estimates that there are now more than three million drug users in Afghanistan, an increase of 96 percent from 2007. The increase is driven by the growing availability of heroin and other drugs in the country. The study also found that the number of opium users has increased by 61 percent, from 1.6 million in 2007 to 2.5 million in 2015.

The study highlighted the challenges faced by policymakers in addressing the drug problem in Afghanistan. The government has made significant efforts in recent years to combat drug trafficking and production, but the problem remains a major challenge. The study also called for increased international cooperation to address the issue.

The study concludes that there is a need for a comprehensive strategy to tackle the drug problem in Afghanistan, including increased investment in treatment and rehabilitation services, as well as drug education and prevention programs. It also calls for increased international cooperation to address the issue.

In addition, the study highlights the need for greater international support for the Afghan government in its efforts to combat drug trafficking and production. The study notes that the Afghan government has made significant efforts in recent years to tackle the problem, but it needs more resources and support from the international community to succeed.

N. Korea Modified Submarine Missile Launches: U.S. Official

The State Department said yesterday that North Korea had modified its submarine-launched ballistic missile to enable it to carry multiple warheads.

North Korea threatened to take military action if the United States armed the U.A.R. with a missile, calling it a "clear violation of the country's sovereignty."

The department said the United States would take "necessary action" to protect its security interests.

U.S.-led Strikes in Syria

The United Nations Security Council voted unanimously today to authorize U.S.-led military action against Syria, in response to an alleged chemical weapons attack.

The council, in a vote of 15 to 0, authorized the use of military force in Syria, provided that the action is taken in accordance with international law.

Syrian President Bashar al-Assad has denied the use of chemical weapons and accused the United States offalse information.

The action comes as international pressure mounts on Syria to end the conflict, which has claimed the lives of tens of thousands of people.
