US Efforts to Shore up Afghan Economy Foundering, Watchdog Finds

WASHINGTON - The Defense Department’s business stability task force is operating in ways that Afghanistan has overlooked strategies, to deliver a plan for a national gas-powered automobile industry as well as commercial exploitation of the country’s vast underground wealth of coal, an inspector general found.

In a letter to Defense Secretary Ash Carter released Friday, John Sopko, special inspector general for Afghanistan reconstruction, said a $52 million, single-commissioned natural gas station with disappointing results for the troubled country’s quest for economic growth. The IG said problems with the project were already evident in 2009 and 2010 when he warned that the plan was too ambitious and would not work. [More on P4]

3 Senior MUDA Officials Missing after Corruption Charges

KARI - In a blow to the upcoming elections from the Ministry of Urban Development Affairs (MUDA), three senior officials of the Ministry are missing after they were arrested by the police.

The three officials are said to have been arrested by the police for corruption charges. The police said that the officials had been involved in the illegal sale and distribution of land and property. The police also said that they had evidence of corruption.

The officials are said to have been in possession of a large amount of documents that were found to be false. The police said that they would continue their investigation to find out if there were any other officials involved in the corruption.

The Ministry of Urban Development Affairs (MUDA) is responsible for the management of urban and rural developments in Afghanistan. The ministry is also responsible for the provision of basic amenities such as water, electricity, and sanitation in urban and rural areas. The ministry is also responsible for the development of infrastructure projects in the country. [More on P4]*

The World’s Renewing Engagement in Afghanistan

By Abudh Bakhrani

With the deteriorating security situation in Afghanistan, there has been a renewed focus on the role of regional powers in the country. This has been influenced by the rising of Nato partners as well as regional players such as China and India. The Afghan government has been working hard to engage with the international community for financial and military support. Afghanistan’s international partners have been crucial in providing financial and military assistance to help stabilize the country. However, there have been challenges in the form of security issues and political instability.

The issue of refugees is an international problem and requires proper attention from international community. The refugees who leave their homelands in pursuit of peace, must not be subjected to different sufferings before they reach a place that is safe for their family. Most of them are in very difficult and harmful positions and are in need of the aid of the international community to help them reach a place that is safe for their family. Therefore, many of them are in need of the aid of the international community to help them reach a place that is safe for their family. Moreover, they have to endure severe kinds of psychological depression and stress as they go through the worst of the war.

The migrants and ethnic minorities are mostly from the third world countries that suffer from war, economic and political instability. Finding no assistance for their children, they move towards the developed countries of the world in search of betterment and opportunity. However, many of them do not have the means to leave the war-torn countries and move to the developed countries. As a result, many of them are in need of financial and medical assistance to help them reach a place that is safe for their family.

The refugees are not only in need of financial and medical assistance, they are also in need of psychological assistance. Many of them are in need of counseling and therapy to help them deal with the trauma of war and displacement. The international community must provide psychological assistance to help them overcome the trauma of war and displacement.

The United Nations and other international organizations have been working hard to help the refugees. They have provided financial assistance and medical aid to help them reach a place that is safe for their family. Moreover, they have provided psychological assistance to help them deal with the trauma of war and displacement.

The international community must continue to work towards providing financial, medical, and psychological assistance to the refugees. They must also work towards providing a stable and safe environment for them to start their lives anew. The international community must also work towards providing a stable and safe environment for the refugees.

Putin Getting Out of G7 Meeting, But Not Much Else

WASHINGTON - President Barack Obama and others left the G7 summit in Germany yesterday, but last night, Putin was still part of the official agenda. Last night, he called former US Secretary of State John Kerry to say that he would not attend the summit. He also told European leaders that he would not be joining the talks in person.

He her mother, Vladimir Putin of the United States, would not be attending the meeting. He has been out of sight for months now, with the state media reporting that he was in Russia for medical treatment.

A leading analyst said yesterday that Putin was in a “state of shock” and that his absence from the summit was a sign that he was not in control of the situation.

China and Russia have a close relationship, with the two nations working together on issues such as Syria and Iran.

Chinese President Xi Jinping called Putin yesterday to discuss the situation in Ukraine and other issues.

The US has expressed concern about Russia’s actions in the region, particularly its support for separatists in eastern Ukraine.

There have been calls for the UN Security Council to take action against Russia, but so far, no resolution has been adopted.

Despite the absence of Putin, the G7 summit continued with discussions on a range of issues, including climate change, trade, and security.

The US has been pressing for greater action on climate change, while Russia has been more cautious.

The summit ended with the G7 leaders issuing a statement that called for “constructive dialogue” with Russia, but also warned that “all options” were on the table if Russia did not change its behavior.

There were also discussions on trade, with the US and other countries pressing for greater access to Russian markets.

The G7 summit was held in Canada, with leaders from the US, UK, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, and Canada attending.

The meeting ended with a joint declaration that called for “a rules-based international order” and for “more effective multilateralism.”

A leading analyst said that the meeting was a “disappointment” for the US, which had been hoping for greater action on Russia.

The summit also discussed the situation in the Middle East, with leaders calling for a “political solution” to the conflict in Syria.

There were also discussions on the situation in Afghanistan, with leaders calling for a “stable and prosperous” future for the country.

NDS Foils Massive Attack Plot on Kabul

KABUL - Security agencies have said a suicide bombing in which 15 Taliban insurgents were killed is the result of accurate NDS intelligence.

National Directorate of Securities (NDS) said in a statement on Saturday that the suicide attackers were killed when a large explosion hit the NDS headquarters in Kabul which was under attack by the insurgents.

NDS said several suicide attackers were killed while the rest were wounded.

The blast triggered a major operation by security forces in Kabul.

Badakhshan 5-Year Development Plan Criticized

FAZARABAD - A five-year development plan in north-eastern Badakhshan province has been launched amid criticism from local government and provincial council officials who argued that the plan’s validity is open to question.

The Provincial Development Authority (PDA) of Badakhshan is among the provinces that has been criticism for its development plans, having been identified as a province where there had been a lack of development.

The provincial council has voiced concerns about the quality and reliability of the development plans, which they argue were not based on comprehensive data.

They have also criticized the lack of a clear vision and strategy for the development of the province.

Wolesi Jirga Amends Health Law to Quality Medical Services

KABUL - The Wolesi Jirga on Saturday passed the health ordinance amendments, which were presented by ZNAK, the association of doctors and dentists.

The amendments were presented by Dr. Fawzia Parta, the head of medical education department.

Outcry Over Closure of Hospital’s Performance

KABUL - Closure of the main entrance of the Kabul Polio Hospital has left patients and doctors in limbo.

The Saffron Development Forum for Farmers has condemned the closure, saying that it was a result of the closure of the Saffron market.

The closure has resulted in a loss of sales for farmers in the area.
