World Day against Child Labor

With the World Bank's target almost met, there is a strong incentive to take the lead in the fight against child labor in order to eradicate it globally. The Global Poverty Project (GPP) recently released its report titled "World Day against Child Labor," which highlights the progress made in reducing child labor worldwide. The report notes that since the World Bank's target was set 15 years ago, the prevalence of child labor has decreased significantly. According to the report, the number of child laborers has fallen from 246 million in 2000 to 168 million in 2015, a decrease of 34%. The report attributes this success to the combined efforts of governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and international bodies in raising awareness, implementing policies, and providing support to affected communities.

In the context of this report, the focus is on the legal and policy frameworks that have been established to combat child labor. The report outlines the legal reforms that have been implemented at the national and international levels, highlighting the importance of strong legal frameworks in ensuring the protection of children's rights. The report also emphasizes the role of international organizations in promoting and enforcing child labor laws, as well as the need for continued efforts to address the underlying causes of child labor, such as poverty, lack of access to education, and economic hardship.

The report concludes with a call for sustained commitment from all stakeholders, including governments, NGOs, and civil society organizations, to continue working towards the elimination of child labor. It also underscores the importance of monitoring and evaluating progress, as well as sharing best practices and lessons learned to ensure that effective strategies are implemented in all contexts.

The World Bank's target of reducing the prevalence of child labor by half by 2015 was an important milestone in the global effort to eradicate child labor. However, the report acknowledges that much work remains to be done to ensure that every child has the right to a childhood free from exploitation and abuse. The report urges all stakeholders to remain committed to this goal and to continue working towards its realization.

Putin praises Russia as Open and Democratic

MOSCOW — President Vladimir Putin, presenting state awards on Revolution Day, celebrates independence day, has praised the country for democracy and openness.

The comments during a ceremony come as relations of the Kremlin with the West improve, a process that some observers attribute to Putin's shift to pursue a policy of enhancing cultural ties and promoting patriotism.

Putin's Friday speech marked Revolution Day, which commemorates the Bolshevik revolution in China, with a speech that highlighted the state's role in shaping the country's future.

The state has been pushing for reforms that include efforts to reduce corruption and improve the economy, with Putin saying that the country needs to "grow in a democratic and modern way".

Ukraine's Mariupol Steel Plants in Critical State after Gas Cut-Off

KIEV — Two of Ukraine's largest steel plants are facing critical shortages of gas, putting the country's steel industry at risk.

The situation is particularly concerning in the steelmaking region of Donetsk, where supplies of gas have been severely cut off.

The plants are currently running at reduced capacity, with some production lines idled due to the lack of gas.

A number of酸rican officials have been visiting the plants in recent weeks to assess the situation and provide assistance.

The decision was made after the government decided not to file charges against the US intelligence agency.

Uzbekistan to Increase Coal Production more than Twice Until 2018

The government is considering plans to increase coal production by more than twice until 2018, as part of efforts to diversify the country's energy mix and reduce reliance on imported fuels.

The government has set a target of increasing coal production from 1.5 million tonnes in 2015 to 3.5 million tonnes by 2018, with the goal of reducing the country's dependence on imported coal.

The plan includes investments in new mines and the expansion of existing facilities, with the aim of increasing the country's self-sufficiency in coal.

President Emomali Rahmon pledged to devote all the resources necessary to achieve this goal, stating that the country is rich in coal reserves and has the potential to become a major player in the global coal market.

However, the plan faces challenges, including the need to address environmental and social concerns associated with coal mining.

The government has promised to work closely with international partners to ensure that the plan is implemented in an environmentally sustainable manner.

Despite these challenges, the goal of increasing coal production is seen as a strategic move to enhance the country's energy security and reduce its carbon footprint.

Uzbekistan is one of the world's largest coal producers, with the country's coal reserves estimated to be among the largest in the world.

Increasing coal production is expected to boost the country's economy, supporting the growth of industries that rely on coal, such as power generation and steel production.

The government is also expected to benefit from increased coal exports, which could contribute to the country's foreign exchange earnings and improve its trade balance.

However, the plan faces criticism from environmentalists and international organizations, who warn that increased coal production could have negative impacts on the country's environment and human health.

They argue that the government should consider alternative energy sources and pursue a transition to cleaner and more sustainable energy technologies.

The government has acknowledged the need to address these concerns and has stated that it will work to minimize the environmental impact of the coal mining and processing activities.

KARUL - Afghanistan’s emerging civil society is bracing for a shift in focus, as the government’s engagement with the Taliban has raised concerns about the future of the country. The recent peace talks in Doha have created hope among many that a lasting peace agreement could be reached, but the implementation of such an agreement is far from certain.

The Taliban have made several concessions in the past, but their commitment to a permanent ceasefire remains to be seen. If a peace agreement is reached, it will be crucial to ensure that the rights of women and other marginalized groups are protected.

Meanwhile, civil society activists continue to work towards creating a more包容性社会 in Afghanistan. They are calling on the international community to support their efforts and to provide necessary resources to sustain their work.
