With the legal term of Afghanistan’s parliament ending in a week, there is a constitutional conflict and political vacuum in the country. The officials are voicing their concern to the president and the media, but they have poor means to be heard. The politicians are seen to be holding a critical time in the country and its stability.

The term of the parliament ended on June 12. President Ghani has called the election to hold on July 20, while the opposition is urging for an extension of the term.

The situation in the country is volatile, with security threats and political instability. The president has called for an extension of the term of the parliament to avoid a constitutional vacuum.

The opposition is opposing the extension of the term, citing the need for a fair and transparent election.

The president has also called for a national dialogue to resolve the current crisis. The situation in the country is volatile, with security threats and political instability.

U.S. Plans to Store Heavy Armies in Baltic, Eastern Europe: Source

WASHINGTON — The United States plans to store heavy military equipment in the Baltic States and southeastern Europe, according to high-level sources who were not willing to be identified by name but were familiar with the plan. The plan involves the storage of large battle tanks, infantry-fighting vehicles, and other military equipment in the Baltic States and southeastern Europe, including storage sites in Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania.

The sources said that the U.S. military is considering establishing military bases in the Baltic States and southeastern Europe, which would include the storage of heavy military equipment. The bases would be used for training purposes and to serve as a deterrent against potential aggression from Russia.

The plan is part of a broader effort by the United States to strengthen its military presence in Europe as tensions with Russia have increased. The U.S. military has been building up its forces in Europe in recent years, with the aim of deterring Russian aggression.

The plan to store heavy military equipment in the Baltic States and southeastern Europe is seen as a significant step in this effort. The sources said that the U.S. military is considering establishing several bases in the region, including large storage sites for tanks and other military equipment.

The plan has been discussed at high-level military meetings and is seen as a way to increase the U.S. military's presence in the region and to deter potential aggression from Russia.

The plan has been met with some skepticism by some experts, who argue that the storage of heavy military equipment in the Baltic States and southeastern Europe could increase tensions with Russia and lead to an arms race in the region.

However, the sources said that the U.S. military is confident that the plan is necessary to deter potential aggression from Russia and to strengthen the U.S. military's presence in Europe.

When asked about the plan, a U.S. military spokesperson said, "We are committed to maintaining a strong military presence in Europe and are taking necessary steps to ensure the security of our allies and partners. We believe that the plan to store heavy military equipment in the Baltic States and southeastern Europe is a necessary step to achieve this goal."
