Is Justice Done?

When four of main culprits in Fahndach’s murder were given the death sentence and few others severe sentences by a special court in 2005, Fahndach’s family has said that they do not accept the decision and see no justice in it. They have decided to keep fighting for justice. But unfortunately Fahndach’s Chief Executive Officer has appealed the court for the death sentence.

The decision of Appeals Court has stirred outrage and Fahndach’s family has asked the Appeals Court to look into the affair, but said that they do not accept the decision and see no justice in it. They have decided to keep fighting for justice.

The execution of Fahndach’s family has appealed the court for the death sentence.

Both the President and Chief Executive showed anger and pity for the incident and had directed the law enforcement agencies to take quick action and bring the culprits to justice. It is important to see how they react after the decision which is now taken by the Appeals Court.

Though it is always difficult to suggest a death penalty to come, justice must be done in any case. If the culprits in Fahndach’s murder are not given death penalty, they can at least be given imprisonment for the sake of justice.

It has become difficult to talk of justice and fair play in a country, where the facilities for a crime that does not exist is sought. How to talk of fairness when the people feel tired of killing a innocent person? We are not concerned about the general public.

The government needs to ensure that such heinous acts will not be repeated. Something that can make a citizen to feel that the government is not more secure while they are on the streets and even in their houses. Something that can teach a lesson to those who use their power to destroy other people. The government needs to ensure that justice will be served.
