Financing for Developing Asia and the Pacific

By Dr. Shamshad Akhtar

Exclusive for the Daily Outlook Afghanistan

The world urgently awaits the outcome of the 3rd International Conference on Financing for Development this month which will be held in Addis Ababa. The conference’s commitment to "variable development" in this context, it is worth underscoring that the Asia-Pacific region is a dynamic and fast-growing region. It also brings to the forefront of deliberations on financing for development and has resulted in initiatives that will enhance its productive potential. With a sustainable strategy to tackle domestic mobilization and infrastructure development, the financing for development will need to be: (i) more targeted, (ii) more focused, (iii) more decisive, (iv) and more effectively monitored in past years which have simultaneously driven global growth. The region’s has made impressive gains in reducing the incidence of extreme poverty over the past 20 years, in line with the MDG targets in 1990. In 1990, the proportion of the world's population living on less than US$1 a day was 1.5 billion people. ESCAP estimates that the financing requirements of the region, which are growing faster than advanced economies, could total US$2-3 trillion in the coming years to fund a comprehensive sustainable development agenda which includes ending poverty, improving access to services, tourism and trade, enhancing protection, infrastructure development and addressing both climate mitigation and adaptation, assuming that all countries account for almost 36 percent of global trade finance transactions, need to launch initiatives to mobilize additional resources. While the financing needed is for more than half of the global trade finance gap, estimated at nearly US$2.5 trillion.

Inadequate levels of finance can harm "twin" harms of productivity and export capacity. While a number of steps are being taken to improve the situation, the region as a whole is still experiencing significant and inadequate levels of finance, especially for countries that are considered " lite" due to their small size. The region also faces challenges in providing the required investments in its sustainable development, where they are needed the most. These challenges include transforming the region’s economy in sustainable development, such as social protection or climate change initiatives, and requires four or more private institutional transfers.
