We Need Moderation not Extremism

H
den beings, while striving to understand the world and different phenomena in it, have gathered knowledge and formed their beliefs. This has resulted in understanding the problems that affect us and the future. But, unfortunately, this understanding is not based on facts and figures, but rather on the narratives and stories we hear.

This is why the need of the hour is to bridge the gap between facts and stories, and to work towards a solution that is based on evidence and logic. Only then can we move forward.

The challenge is not only to understand the facts and figures, but also to understand the implications of our actions.

The real challenge is not the demand of social and political crises, but the ideologies that shape different societies by differ-sent groups and their interactions.

The problem is not that every individual in society is either right or wrong. The real issue is how we can come together and find a common ground. This requires understanding and respect for each other's perspectives.

In conclusion, the need of the hour is to promote moderation and resist extremism. Only then can we create a society that is united, peaceful, and prosperous.
