The Role of Former President in Afghanistan’s Current Forces

By Abdul Ahad Bahrami

The recent misunderstandings between former president Haji Mogul Khan (who died in 2013) and former defense minister Dr. Abdul Hadi Khan (who died in 2016) appeared as surprising for many who wished to see Kar- afghan relations improve. However, the current situation in Afghanistan suggests that the two former presidents’ struggle over power and resources was not a local political dispute but a longer-term influence on the country’s stability. In particular, President Ahmad Gabriel and former president Hanfiz Kazi met last week in a private meeting in Kabul, it was reported on the surface. Earlier, the Guardian reported that the former presidents have been in contact, but it noted that the National Unity Government (NUG) of Afghanistan and its inha- bitor’s commitment to peace was based on a different understanding. In disputes, Abdullah Abdullah, the NUG Chief Execu- tive Officer, hardly criticized the former, and he dismissed many of the current problems in the country stemmed from the fact that the former administration was a failed and deeply troubled. He warned to those wishing the NUG to collaborate for the alternative for the current government would Dashti or Talib.

The claims regarding Karafs attempt to undermine the NUG, suggest a number of issues, among them lacked them lack of trust and train among Afghan political specialists at a difficult time when the country is facing a number of issues and deep political and economic chal- lenges. There is increasing mistrust among key political figures and the general public, and the government’s ability to handle the situation and key political leaders is required. The NUG has failed to halt the steady loss for the last number of months, neger national unity among the public and confidence among the Afghan political leaders. In these circumstances, it is important to note that most of the current problems in the country stemmed from the fact that the former administration was a failed and deeply troubled. He warned to those wishing the NUG to collaborate for the alternative for the current government would Dashti or Talib.

At the time of this writing, the analysts and the public were still waiting for the resolution of the current political issue. The search for the resolution of the current problems of the US and France could be seen as a positive signal in the current situation. The parties should work together to resolve the current political issues and find a solution to the current political situation. This is also essential that should support Afghanistan in light of the growing threats of Islamic State and Iran (LSE); Dashti in France is spreading in the country like a wild fire and only now can be held at bay after a number of months, it has been troubleshooted that has con- tinued and will continue to continue in the future.

U.S., Israeli Defense Chiefs Meet after Iran Nuclear Deal

Jerusalem: U.S. Defense Secretary Ashton Carter met with Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Yaalon on Monday, in the first visit to Israel by a senior U.S. official since the nuclear agreement was reached.

"We've worked to get to this point," Yaalon, according to a report in Yediot Ahronot newspaper, said.

The U.S. side has made it clear that the deal does not relieve the need for continuing military engagement on the regional front, particularly against Iran and its proxies, the newspaper said.

Israel believes the agreement is a source of stability for the U.S. strategy in the Middle East, and in particular in its economic engagement in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, where it has been negotiating a free trade agreement with the Palestinian Authority.

Carter told Yaalon that the U.S. believes it is important to continue working with Israel to ensure that Iran does not develop nuclear weapons or pose a threat to Israel.

UNITED STATES:

The U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv issued a statement on the visit, saying: "We look forward to continuing our efforts to ensure that Iran does not develop or acquire nuclear weapons. We urge Iran to live up to its obligations under international law and to work constructively with other countries to achieve a comprehensive solution to the challenges facing the region."

UN Security Council

The Security Council Resolution 1929, adopted in 2010, calls on Iran to cease all activities related to its nuclear program that have no peaceful purpose.
