EERC Meets with Experts, Stakeholders for Guidance on Reform

The convention (EERC) is determined to take advantage of all these positive developments to engage more actively with the international community, women leaders, and other stakeholders and civil society actors in hopes of furthering efforts on the pressing issues facing Afghanistan’s electricity sector.

Since its formation last week, the EERC has been working on making up for lost time because of delays caused by disagreements between the two main power-governing bodies over the composition of the commission. The scheduling of Parliamentary elections is largely dependent on the EERC and the GECAT, and decisions made by the two groups are Mandatory for implementing reforms.

Furnishing Youth with Contemporary Resources

By Asmatyari

Childhood is the most innocent stage in a human life. It can be classified into early and late youth—those in their youth who apply to meet the demands of society or sold as a means of earning money. Both of them are rich asset of a nation. In that phase of life where a child will be the future of the nation. That is why we need to make sure that our children are not only educated but also have access to new things, and is the sweetheart of all the family members. But this is not the only thing that needs to be done. The children are in the primary stages of growth and are also the ones that are the most vulnerable and burdensome. Hence, the innocent child is not the sweetheart of the family members; instead, he is an earning machine working the entire day in order to satisfy the needs and wants of the family. This leads to his mental and physical health, and life expectancy, and eventually resulting in child labor. Child labor, therefore, presents a set of challenges that the whole world is facing today. Child labor includes working children who are below a certain age and work for more than six hours and are in one of the worst forms of child exploitation. Child labor not only causes damage to a child’s physical and mental health but also keeps him deprived of his basic rights to education, development, and freedom. According to statistics provided by UNICEF, there are an estimated 250 million children aged 9 to 14 years employed in child labor worldwide, and this number is expected to rise.

The evil is not only affecting under-developed and developing countries, but developed countries are also facing this through the route of

"...and so the children are taught the highest percentage of child labor (81%) followed by Africa (52%). According to International Labor Organization (ILO), child labor will no longer exist in the developed countries, but the world’s total income would rise by nearly 22% over 20 years, which accounts for more than $5 billion. Eradicating child labor will help in boosting the economy of a country."

Child labor requires urgent action. Work in illegal remote mines and other sources for at least 12 hours a day since mining a mine for coal and salt is a common job for poor families, they force their children into it for money, food and other things. Child labor is an issue that requires urgent action. There are several estimates, one in four Afghans child aged seven to 14 is engaged in child labor. According to experts, the situation in Afghanistan is very critical in itself, and the problem of child labor is exacerbated in Afghanistan, affecting specifically on children that influence their education. Child laborers face many challenges from an underdeveloped, rural, and deprived poor society that needs to provide them with solar and cultural facilities in household decision-making about child labor and considers their implications for policy. The findings were drawn from interviews with 35 young people in rural Kalagh Karzai, a city and a countryside in Panjsher Province, including their city and community near the Islamic Gaza with a strong connection to the region. In addition, researchers consulted stakeholders from the Ministry of Labor, Social Affairs, and Migration; the Afghanistan National Institute for Policy Studies (ANIPS); the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF); the Ministry of Culture; and the Ministry of Education. The decision to send children to work is influenced by a number of factors, including the economic conditions of the family that dominates the decision-making of all households in the country and the country. This leads to worse outcomes under norms affect the availability of labor resources, which can result in the need to have children in the workplace as soon as possible. It is a great national waste if these energetic hands and brains are not provided with some sort of work to meet the needs of the society that needs to be taken into consideration and given a direction—some constructive work. This massive man- power of the workers provided in enthusiasm is immense development work. Afghanistan youth have never lagged behind when called upon to make their contribution. It is for this reason that the national leaders have to play their part by mobilizing their abilities and providing them with both a direction and the necessary environment of sustenance elements. There can be a large number of schemes, programs and projects wherein their total involvement will bring quicker and better re- sults. They can play a pivotal role in the socio-economic development of the society. There are many evil practices in our society. If we are not associated with them, the youth may be much more satisfying. There may be schemes connected with the youth, and it is a necessity. The youth may be assigned the job of dissemination of knowledge for better farming, new techniques and proper use of fertilizers and pesti- cides. What is required is that the youth be given adequate training in those tasks. In a drive against energetic, their energy can be used for the development of the society and the prevention and protection of the youth. The world may be envisaged as a playground for the freedom of the youth. There may be more opportunities to have the youth in the society with the proper facilities for getting equipped with the knowledge of the modern era.

There are different types of preaching a religion, or it would be better to say that there are different degrees of persisting with a religion. There are people who strictly adhere to the basic tenets of their religion, but there are also people who are content with a religion as a whole, while it is true that many more people have other religious beliefs. People in all parts of the world have different degrees of persisting with a religion. People in Afghanistan are unique in this regard. The country is rich with religious diversity, and the people of Afghanistan are unique in this regard. People in Afghanistan are unique in this regard. EU Starts Implementing Iran Nuclear Agreement

In a significant step towards resolving the nuclear standoff, the EU has begun implementing the Iran Nuclear Agreement. The agreement, which was signed in 2015, aims to curb Iran's nuclear activities in exchange for the lifting of sanctions. The implementation process involves several stages, including the enforcement of certain provisions that were previously controversial. The EU has been working diligently to ensure that Iran meets its obligations, thereby paving the way for the lifting of sanctions. This move is expected to have significant economic impacts, particularly for the European Union, as it opens up new trade opportunities.

Cuban Immigration Dilemma Far from over Despite Human Trafficking Concerns

The Cuban immigration dilemma remains unresolved despite efforts to combat human trafficking. The problem is compounded by the influx of refugees from Cuba, who are seeking safer living conditions in the US. This has led to a significant increase in immigration applications, with the US government struggling to cope with the surge. The issue has been exacerbated by the Trump administration's hardline immigration policies, which have made it more difficult for refugees to gain asylum.
