US Calls for Af-Pak Efforts to Defeat Violent Extremists

WASHINGTON - Afghanistan and Pakistan need to work together to achieve the shared goal of defeating violent extremists, the United States said on Monday, as it expressed concern over growing tension between the neighbors after a series of terrorist attacks in Kabul.

"It is in the urgent interest of both countries to eliminate safe havens and to reduce the operational capacity of the Taliban on both sides of the border," State Department spokesperson John Kirby told reporters at his daily news conference.

Referring to terrorists detonating a car bomb at Kabul international airport, he noted "Now is the time for the leaders of Afghanistan and Pakistan to work together to achieve the shared goal of defeating violent extremists."

Rebels in Ghur Torch Civilian Houses, Harvests

GRADOH - Afghan rebel fighters torched two houses and 10 barns belonging to civilians in the village of Sabir Khan in Ghur province, local residents said on Tuesday.

Two civilians were killed and five others injured in the attack, local residents said.

The attack took place near the village of Sabir Khan in Ghur province, about 250 kilometers west of Kabul.

Local residents said the rebels torched the houses and barns without any warning, causing widespread damage.

The Afghan government has condemned the attack and vowed to bring the perpetrators to justice.

Civilian Casualties - 10

The attack is the latest in a series of attacks by insurgent groups in the region, which has been hit by a surge in violence in recent months.

Residents said they were frustrated with the lack of security in the area and called for the government to take immediate action to prevent further attacks.

The Afghan government has been criticized for its failure to provide adequate security for civilians in areas affected by the conflict.

Militants Kill 44 Abducted Engineers in Ghazni

GHAZNI CITY - Officials said on Monday that 44 engineers kidnapped by militants in southern Ghazni province have been killed.

The governor of the province, Ahmadullah, said the engineers were killed by a roadside bomb in the district of Lasht.

He said the kidnappers had demanded a ransom of 200 million Afghani for the release of the engineers.

The attack is the latest in a series of kidnappings and assassinations of foreign engineers in Afghanistan, which has prompted international concern.

Ahmadullah said the kidnapping had been carried out by a group of militants who had been active in the area for several months.

He said the government was working on strategies to prevent future kidnappings and assassinations.

Militants Suffer Heavy Casualties, Claim Official

KANDAHAR: At least 147 Afghan commandos died on Wednesday after being ambushed by Taliban fighters in the Spin Boldak area.

The operation involved a large-scale military operation in which Afghan commandos used heavy weaponry and air support.

The operation was launched in response to a series of recent attacks by Taliban fighters in the area.

The operation resulted in the capture of several key Taliban commanders, including the district commander of the area.

The operation was also aimed at disrupting the Taliban's supply lines and cutting off their support from Pakistan.

The operation is part of a broader effort by the Afghan government to strengthen its control over areas that have been lost to the Taliban.

The Challenges of the Afghan Judicial System

By Abdul Ahad Bahrami

In the current institutional development efforts going on in Afghanistan, strengthening the Afghan judicial system is considered as a key component of the political and legal process. The Afghan judicial system is one of the most imperfect judicial systems in the world, suffering from a number of serious problems. The failure of the judicial system is not a new phenomenon in Afghanistan. In 2014, a judicial system reform bill was adopted in Kabul, but the judicial system is still facing many challenges.

Despite major efforts to bring reforms to the Afghan judicial system, the judicial system in Afghanistan is in a state of crisis. There are several reasons for the weaknesses of the Afghan judicial system.

The most challenging task for reforming the Afghan judicial system is addressing the existing structural challenges. In 2005, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights launched a judicial reform program for the first time to improve the Afghan judicial system. In a proposal to improve the judicial system, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Afghanistan, Saleh Al Hasani, presented some measures to strengthen the Afghan judicial system. It helped addressing key insufficiencies such as lack of resources and insufficient funding. In order to address key structural challenges of the Afghan judicial system, there is need to improve capacities for professionals and training for judges and other judicial personnel. It is also necessary to improve the capacity of the Afghan judicial institutions to handle cases. In order to ensure effective and efficient judicial work, administrative reforms are required to instill ethical values.

Major challenges of the Afghan judicial system are lack of high-quality legal education, qualified staff, proper communication and coordination between various government institutions, and lack of transparency and accountability. The Afghan judicial system has been found to be ineffective in handling cases, especially in rural areas. In addition, the Afghan judicial system has been found to be slow, inefficient, and lacking in accountability.

The Afghan government has made some efforts to improve the Afghan judicial system. However, these efforts have not been sufficient to address the challenges faced by the Afghan judicial system. The Afghan government has been criticized for failing to implement the recommendations of the judicial reform committee. This has led to the lack of trust in the Afghan judicial system.

In conclusion, the Afghan judicial system needs to undergo significant reforms to improve its performance and efficiency. The Afghan government needs to take urgent steps to address the challenges facing the Afghan judicial system. It is essential to ensure that the Afghan judicial system is capable of providing justice to all Afghan citizens.
