Economy Decides the Political Structure

Afghanistan has a decisive role in development and growth of a country. Without stable economy it would be an illusion to talk about order and stability in other fields of life. It can be observed in today's world that the countries with stable economies are dominant in various areas, the most important of which is politics. The international political arena is basically overshadowed by giant economies. The country is under the level of influence that the developed countries, like USA, UK, China and others have in contemporary international politics. Politics are the power of money and power empties from money, while money is generated through a proper economic infrastructure. The same power, in the international politics may relate to different kinds of influences that may affect various decisions in international relations. Why? Because international politics is a big comfortable game, and war, international organizations or national policies, power has a decisive role. And, that power can be given to politicians or military persons, the influence and importance of these influences. Therefore, it is easy to see the world powers have strong influence on different international development and stability and wars in international political order. In fact, the current political order is designed by the political forces of the moment and the international relations of the world. The current political order, wherein capitalism and democracy is dominant, is a political order that is not very different from what the gigantic capitalist economies want it to be.

A thorough study of economy and politics will reveal that economy is the root of a political system. For example, when human societies mostly had to deal with the production of goods, the segmentation of the political system was based on monarchy and landlords. However, as the societies evolved to industrialized societies there was a shift towards democracy. Therefore, economy to a great extent decides the forms and nature of the political system and, therefore, stable economy gives rise to political order and stable states gives rise to political systems that are stable.

It can also be observed that the societies where the people are mostly poor and do not have the illusion of life, there are more chances of political upheavals. The discontented people, suffering from deprivation, are more likely to seek change in political order and would not respect such a system. Revolutionarily, it can be said that the societies that are economically stable are politically stable. The third world countries can be observed in this regard. As the people are poor, do not have basic requirements of life and suffer from deprivation, the political stability of these countries is questionable.

Apart from that there are other factors as well that have been influence, but clarity is still not visible. The economic condition of the country is a stable condition of the country, which is a ball of moss with different types of mineral and other natural resources, the economic development, the economic situation of the region, the political structure and the economic situation of the region. The stock market and economy of the region are all interrelated.同步に、政治的な安定を求める多くの人々が、生活の安定を求めるため、政治的な安定を求めることが求められている。したがって、政治的な安定は経済的な安定に大きく影響を及ぼす。 november 4, 2015

Women's Vulnerability to Social and Domestic Harms

By Hujjatullah Zia

A woman usually bears the brunt of social and domestic challenges in our community. Her role is underestimated, her rights are violated, her life is filled with violence and suffering. This is not only due to her gender but also due to the fact that the society in general lacks empathy for women. This situation is further compounded by the fact that women are often subjected to violence and discrimination in various forms.

Regional and cultural differences, traditions and customs, contribute to the oppression of women. Women are often seen as the property of their families and husbands and are restricted in their rights and freedoms. The legal framework in our country is weak and does not provide adequate protection to women.

Women's rights are violated on an almost daily basis. They are frequently subjected to violence, abuse and neglect. The whole fabric of society disintegrates against them in various ways. Being trapped and oppressed in their own social systems, women face challenges posed by men with female victims - the public believe. The lack of a culture that respects and values women, their experiences of judicial corruption, and lack of any kind of legal protection are major factors that contribute to the violation of women's rights.

Women's dignity is violated without an iota of humanity. They frequently fall victim to rape and abuse, which is a severe form of domestic violence. The moral and social values, which constitute a significant part of our culture, are often used to justify such acts. It is a matter of concern that the perpetrators of such acts are often not brought to justice.

Women and children are subjected to violence and abuse. This violence takes place within the family and extends to the community. The lack of awareness and education about the rights of women and children is a major issue. There is a need for more comprehensive programs to raise awareness and educate people about the rights of women and children.
