Afghanistan Doesn’t want to be in Isolation: Ghani

KARUL - Afghanistan could connect central regions through the Silk Road and build a joint future through its primitive sources, President Ghani said on Friday, the second day of the 6th Regional Economic Cooperation Conference on Afghanistan (RECCA-V) summit in Kabul.

Titled "The Silk Road through Afghanistan", the summit was transformed on Thursday with delegates from more than 30 countries in the region and beyond and some 40 regional and international agencies including World Bank and the Asian Development Bank in attendance. Officials from the Presidential Palace, the Chief Executive's office and representatives also attended the two-day seminar, which took place at the Foreign Ministry's building here.

Speaking on the occasion, President Ghani said today's Silk Road was full of entrepreneurial and commercial innovation potential and could serve as a conduit for economic development. Mr. Ghani said the Silk Road would be a sovereign, financial and dispute resolution system with nodal cities and once a major economic source for the region. Historically, the road was one of the important trade routes around 2,500 years ago. The road connected Kabul with the north and from there it went to China and eastern parts of Europe. It was the main route used for import and export of edible and decorative products from India to China.

Electoral Reform Suggestions Hard to Implement: IEC

KARUL - The Independent Election Commission (IEC) on Sunday termed the week of Election Reform Conference (ERC) unproductive, saying its flawed suggestions were hard to implement.

Rearranging the system was not possible in the current situation of crisis, the commission said, warning that enforcement of the proposals would give birth to more than one political system that might put a negative impact on the political process.

A statement from IEC questioned calls for giving 100 seats to political parties in current circumstances. It said political parties needed more time to mature before being made part of the system. The election body also showed reservations about the introduction of a new system, saying the people of Afghanistan were not familiar with it. [More on P4-04] through there are many processes that are necessary for the political development in Afghanistan, sponsoring parliamentary elections as the moment, is considered the top priority. What will be the nature of the election and how it will be conducted will to a large extent decide the political scenario in post-2013 Afghanistan. It is a crystal clear fact that Afghan political system needs extra care, the people's rights and efforts for its improvement. So, the Afghan authorities, especially the Afghan President himself must strive to the political problem at the core, is facing almost a similar sort of alteration.

Parliamentary Election

In addition efforts should be carried out to introduce improvements on the legal side and in the society. Government and facilitators and facilitators and facilitators and facilitate and facilitate the people so thoroughly that maximum number of people participate in elections and the turn out should be satisfactorily independent and free of any kind of interferences. The last presidential and parliamentary elections were thoroughly dominated by corruption and insecurity.

Most of the people because of the security concerns and many other problems couldn't even cast their votes. Therefore, the election environment and rules of influence on voters also play an important role in determining the nature of the government. However, in Afghanistan this basic institution of democracy has not been able to function appropriately. The last presidential and parliamentary elections were thoroughly dominated by corruption and insecurity.

A great analysis of Afghanistan's political scenario will depict clearly the current political processes are also being kept short of accountability. Our country needs an effective parliament and processes that are highly participatory and demystify the issues. Afghanistan's elections are being kept away from the process, a sort of ambiguity and distortion is being generated. It is true that this is a very significant process and the security and the people and would not care much about the public opinion. Afghan political parties also have not been able to function appropriately. The last presidential and parliamentary elections were thoroughly dominated by corruption and insecurity.

On the other hand, security of the next presidential and provincial councils' election means to be a tough achievement for National Security Forces (NSF) that took over security responsibility in most parts of the country. It is expected that Taliban and other insurgent groups will increase their activities to be the people from participating in the elections process. In 2009 elections, incidents where the Taliban snatched off voters fingers before voting was a common sight. In 2013, it has been stated that the same or even worse cases of violence may repeat. In order to ensure an election being honest and fair, coordination among security forces in Afghanistan. The NATO troops will probably continue to support the Afghan forces in terms of security.

Meanwhile, Afghan government needs to address the concerns regarding good governance and growing corruption. It has to make sure that the government and the officials have to be accountable. The Afghan government has to be more approachable to the country better place for them to live. It also needs to ensure that the rules in the country does not allow all the support and assistance to fail all on our own self-centered incentives. Otherwise, the expectation of peace and development in the country and the region will be nothing more than wishful thinking.

Germany, France Joint Call for EU Asylum Process Overhaul

ROME - Just days after Italy almost locked its borders to the world, it announced plans on Tuesday to call for a major overhaul of the asylum system in the 27-nation European Union, as it faced one of the biggest fresh waves of migrants in decades.

Italian Foreign Minister and Interior Minister Matteo Salvini, who has been one of the main opponents of a liberalized asylum regime in Europe, said the plans would include a “zero-tolerance” attitude to illegal migration and the re-introduction of a system of checks.

“Europe’s asylum policy must be changed as a matter of urgency,” Salvini said in a statement. “We need to put an end to the policy of mixed migration, which has undermined the fabric of our societies and economies.”

The plan, which is expected to be presented to EU leaders at a summit in Brussels on Oct. 17, is likely to be met with resistance from other countries that are more open to migration, such as Germany and France.
