Poor Political System Led to Fall of Kunduz

KARJAL - European Union (EU) Ambassador to Afghanistan Franz-Michael Mollin on Wednesday told The Daily Outlook the collapse of Kunduz came as a "big surprise" to the international community and a technical setback for the Afghan government.

He said he believes that inefficiency in the political system led to the fall of the city.

According to Mollin, the Kunduz crisis is the result of an incompetent political system and not the inability of the security forces.

"It was a big surprise to the international community and a technical setback to the Afghan government and it is very important that lessons are learned from Kunduz so that in future we don't have a repeat of the situation," Mollin said.

"We are waiting for independent reports to emerge from Kunduz and I am confident that it will happen. We have also encouraged from our side the Afghan Independent Human Rights Commission to look into what happened in Kunduz. What is very important is that we get a good understanding of what happened. For now we have no worry about reports emerging later," Mollin added.

KARJAL - President Ashraf Ghani for the first time also mentioned a cabinet meeting on Tuesday that "terrorist groups are made up of Taliban, criminals and foreign mercenaries" and he had a "separate message" when he was referred to the Taliban as either brothers or political opponents.

"We need to have a separate message when we refer to them. We have a separate message when we refer to them as either brothers or political opponents," Ghani said.

Russia has Ground Troop Battalion, Advanced Tanks in Syria: US NATO Envoy

BRUSSELS - Russia's military buildup in Syria includes a "considerable" troop and armored vehicle presence, long-range rockets and a battlefield air defense network, a US envoy to NATO said on Wednesday. Speaking on the eve of a NATO defense ministers' meeting to be dominated by Russia's intervention in Syria's civil war, US Ambassador to NATO Daniel Fried said Moscow had managed a "quite impressive" military deployment over the past week to the Syrian rebel base in Tartus and its allies' base in Latakia. "There is a considerable and growing Russian naval presence in the eastern Mediterranean, more than 10 ships now, which is a bit cut out of proportion for a news briefing. "The most Russian re- turn of my lifetime," said the envoy, who quoted a US defense source as saying Russia was "basing long-range rocket, they can reach targets all across Europe," List said. Kunduz Tragedy Taught Us Many Lessons!

esterday, people in Ghur province got the streets for a mass demonstration in the support of the victims of Kunduz. They expressed their condolences for the loss of victims and demanded from the government that the culprits in the government security forces, whose mistakes or negligence gave birth to this incident, should be punished. They also chanted slogans against Taliban and their allies.

Kunduz is still not completely cleared from the Taliban militancy in the city and the security forces are busy in house-to-house search of Taliban militants. On the other hand, Taliban are exerting all their efforts to weaken the security forces presence in the city. In this encounter, once again our forces proved that they are brave and ready to fight and defeat Taliban. On the other hand, a number of civil officials and high-rank military officers were injured.

The Executive Officer of Afghani Taliban in Kunduz has claimed that people in Kunduz are not fighting against the Taliban. They are fighting against those in Kunduz who are fighting against the Taliban. Residents of Kunduz are not fighting against the Taliban. They are fighting against those in Kunduz who are fighting against the Taliban.

The replacement of Massoud and the foundation of democratic government, Afghan nation hoped to breathe a sigh of relief in a society void of violence, war and sexual discrimination and in a fine society, one could exercise their rights, dignity without political and social turbulence. In other words, with the fall of the Taliban regime, Afghan looked ahead to be freed from these turmoils and rebuilds the Taliban war. In a nutshell, they desired to live in a society, a war-free, law-abiding, peaceful society. Right, democracy is highly susceptible to political instability. The absence of democratic institutions in the recent history, our society has been dominated by a society of brutality, in which regimes come to power violently and are overthrown by violent means. There is not only the force of democracy and freedom but also in the face of the disorders, the presence of ruthless war and democracy is a panacea for the bloody wounds of our nation.

Kunduz, a city of 300,000 and capital of the northern province of Kunduz, in northern Afghanistan, was attacked by Taliban fighters from their bases in neighboring Nuristan and Badakhshan on 27th day of the month of October. By June 2017, US-Commander of the Afghan National Army in Kunduz, Abdul Rehim, confirmed that the region has been freed from Taliban control.

The Attack

Kunduz tragedy also became a reason for the change in the tone of the government. The other day, President Ghani stated that terrorist groups including Taliban, criminals and foreign terrorists carried out Kunduz attack. It is the change from his previous statements after the emergence of Afghan terrorists. The crimes committed against humanity by Taliban have changed the voice of Warfare and it is a declaration. Study Finds Radicalization on the Rise in Afghan Schools

KARUL - There is widespread political activism, including an extremist Taliban presence among high school students in Afghanistan’s southern Kandahar Province, according to a new evaluation by the Afghan Institute of Learning and Evaluation Unit (AILEU).

This is despite a government in Kabul that has been making efforts to support the education of all groups in high schools, which in itself can be argued as a sign of an improvement. However, AILEU is a statement.

The study indicates that the ongoing radicalization of high school students has not yet met the expectations of the community, where it would contribute destructively to society. However, rather than waiting for that to happen, the competent authorities should rediscern the educational strategies and, first and foremost, their battle on political activism in high schools.
