Controlling the Ghost of Anger

By Dilawar Sherzai

anger has the capacity to do much damage to human beings, both emotionally and physically. It can last for moments, days, weeks, months, or even years. It is hard to control when it comes, but it also affects our interaction with the world and the people around us. Anger is to a large extent a result of frustration, disappointment, and frustration. In most of the cases it is a negative to an anger which brings about negative reactions. It is needed to control anger at all times. The control of anger is the right way — that is not within everybody’s power and consciousness. People get angry on different matters and each person has its own manner of expressing their anger. In many cases there is a lack of control when it comes to anger and it is expressed in different ways. Anger can be observed in daily life, almost daily basis. Sometimes we see it in our friends and families and others in our family home.

Anger basically has different stages. It starts with a situation or happening that triggers it. Trigger changes the normal situation, and makes us feel frustrated. Then the anger enters a stage which we know as the reactive stage.
In this stage the anger escalates very fast and becomes more serious. People become more serious. The person gets ready to get angry and start reacting in a manner that will be more serious and dangerous.

The stage of anger is the most critical. At this stage the reactivity actually begins. As anger begins to escalate the situation becomes more serious and the person feels more physical and psychological. At this stage there is a risk of harm to others and to themselves. The person is not able to control the cycle every time it is triggered.
There are possibilities of controlling it before it excels takes into a crisis. But whenever it reaches to a crisis, it is bound to cause a lot of damage.

Tommy Morrison, in his book about anger, said, "Anger is a poison that can destroy people’s lives, families, and societies. . But it is also a natural emotion that all human beings experience. . . . The key is to control anger and use it wisely so that it does not harm others or our own well-being. . . . Anger can be used to help us make positive changes in the way we think and behave. . . . Anger is like flowing water, there’s nothing wrong with it as long as it’s not too hot. Flow like stagnant water, you are destroyed. . . . Stagnant water becomes deadly, poisons dolescent, physically, deadly. It is like a yoke. On flowing water travels little paper boats; paper boats against a flowing current is a fact; allow your water to flow, along with all the paper boats of forgiveness.

There are different ways to manage anger. First it is necassary to know the situation or one’s self will both before the anger happens or during it. A person can take some of these steps that may decrease the threat of anger and should be triggered. He can change his habits on the social and personal aspects. He can ask others to do so but only with respect for others. With the change in the cross he possesses about the things around him or start analyzing a teach person. The reason for a better understanding of the knowledge or to know others what others are thinking.
However, the most important thing to do is to change the person’s way of thinking. This reduces stress and makes one’s self bigger and more capable of dealing with the most difficult situations.

The other way is to avoid anger by avoiding some of the avoiding. This person should be aware of the things that it would be to avoid problems that one’s will make a person upset and help prevent future problems. It is wise to be aware of the things that cause you to feel upset. This will help you to run away from a difficult situation or a conflict when it has already been created; it means to avoid a situation situations and doing something or much greater deterio-

Political Instability - Afghanistan’s Flight

By Hujjatullah Zia

The Taliban movement grew from the Afghan orphanage in Badakhshan province of northern Afghanistan. The group was formed in 1994 by a group of Islamic scholars who were opposed to the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan. The Taliban movement was led by Mullah Omar and his followers. It was organized as a response to the Soviet invasion and attempted to create a religious state.

The Taliban movement was funded by foreign countries and was supported by the United States. It was considered a terrorist organization by many countries. The Taliban movement was able to gain power and establish control over large areas of Afghanistan due to the international support it received.

The Taliban movement was eventually defeated by the Coalition Forces in 2001. The United States and its Alliand Afghan forces launched an offensive against the Taliban movement. The coalition forces were able to overthrow the Taliban government and establish a new government in Afghanistan.

In the aftermath of the fall of the Taliban government, political instability has persisted in Afghanistan. The Taliban have continued to pose a threat to the stability of the country.
