Increasing Role of Russia and China in International Politics!

By Muhammad Rasool Shah

The increasing role of Russia and China in a number of international issues is a fact which cannot be ignored. This is despite a seemingly steady and consistent push, both political and economic, by the West to marginalize these two powers. It is a fact that Russia and China still face a number of challenges and obstacles to their aspirations, but at the same time, it is a given that all the key players in the world, in the Yasen war and peace-playing role of the world, are either friendly or their allies. The presence of these two countries in international politics is a fact that cannot be ignored.

In terms of their increasing influence in international politics, China has done particularly well. The Chinese are a great and great nation, and the Chinese have emerged as a major player in international politics. AU Call for Comprehensive Approach to Post-Ebola Recovery

ADDIS ABABA - The African Union (AU) has called for a comprehensive approach to the post-Ebola recovery effort to more effectively address the wider social, economic, financial and humanitarian consequences of the virus outbreak.

The AU and Security Council have discussed in its last meeting about the Ebola virus outbreak and have decided to support the countries affected.

The AMISOM mission in Somalia has continued to monitor the situation and has helped to address the needs of the affected population.

The AU has also called for international support for the post-Ebola recovery efforts and the need for a comprehensive approach to the post-Ebola recovery efforts.

The AU Council condemned the three most affected countries for their failure to eradicate the virus and the Ebola virus in the fight against the virus.

It emphasized that the concerned countries must follow up the WHO guidelines and to ensure effective surveillance mechanisms for monitoring the cross-border movement of people and animals in all the three most affected countries.

UK Gov't Under Pressure Over Welfare Cuts for Poor

LONDON - British Prime Minister David Cameron's government faces a major political test this week over plans to cut welfare payments for low-income households. The two countries are set to vote on a change to low-carbon fuel charges in the north of England, and in the south of England.

Cameron's government has proposed a 2% cut in fuel duty over the next five years, in line with the EU's targets for reducing fuel consumption.

The government has faced criticism for its plans, with the opposition Labour Party saying it is not doing enough to help low-income households.

The government has defended its plans, saying it is necessary to reduce the country's reliance on fossil fuels.

The opposition has pledged to scrap the cuts if they win power at the next election.
Afghanistan will not Close Door on Peace: Hashemi

KABUL - The Afghan government remained Sunday that it will not close the door on those who accept Afghanistan’s Constitution and join the peace process.

“We as a government cannot close the peace door, but peace has its own conditions,” President Ashraf Ghani’s deputy spokesman Sayed Zafar Hashemi said.

“We make peace with those Afghan [anti-government] groups that accept the Constitution,” he added.

These statements come after Pakistan’s Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif said during his trip to Washington that action against Taliban and talibs with the group can’t happen at the same time.

Sharif met with President Barack Obama last week and said in a joint statement that they would insist that all Taliban groups, including the Haqqani Network, “are unable to operate from the soil of Pakistan.”

Both sides also agreed to take action against Pakistanis-in-Taliban which allegedly carries out attacks against India.

In addition, Sharif said Friday that Pakistan was ready to help Afghanistan recover from the Talibs and Talib rebels. Minister of State for Defense, Mark Toner, reported. “More on Pk-09.”
