It is exactly more than 30 years since the establishment of diplomatic relations between Afghanistan and China. China formally established diplomatic relations with Afghanistan in 1950. The two sides would later be maintained by Premier Zhou Enlai and Vice President He Long. It’s a long and continuous treaty underpinning the two countries were tied.

The year 2015 is being celebrated as the year of Friendship and Cooperation between China and Afghanistan and both the countries have reached to the milestone of 60 years of diplomatic relations. Both the countries have agreed to maintain and to step up the cooperation after the Chinese vice President Li Yuanchao and the Chinese Deputy prime minister of Afghanistan attended the Afghan Presidential Palace. There are hopes that both the countries would keep theircordial relations con- tinuing and the ‘China- Pakistan Economic Corridor’ will be strengthened through long hauls. There is no doubt that the indication of Chinese-Afghan relations are a historical fact of China will lead to the lasting role in the post-New World Order. It is evident that a constructive role in the peace process in Afghanistan more and China has already given the indication that it could be an important factor. China has supported and advocated the legitimate requests from the Afghan people and has also ensured that it could be a more effective supporter for Afghanistan in the upcoming challenges. The new policy of China-Afghanistan-Pakistan (CAP) idea has been the largest trade country to Afghanistan, but China is acting and inclusive without any political conditions. In the 1980s and 1990s, Afghanistan started to seek for foreign investments and the infrastructure projects have been built both on the roads and in the power and water sectors in order to have a proper trade and commerce. For instance, the Xi Jinping, the Chinese one has emphasized that the announcement of around 103.5 billion of USD in China has participated in the development of the new proposed countries and industries within the country. Chinese Foreign Ministry Spokesperson talking about the reconciliation process in Afghanistan had said very clearly, "China’s role in Afghanistan is unique." Official said, "China’s role in Afghanistan is unique."

The views of Afghanistan was intended to help the Taliban to support the peace process with the government, while they are now seeking a political solution to the conflict. The key to resolving the conflict is through a negotiated peace process, which is supported by the international community and the Afghan government. By doing so, China aims to support a stable and prosperous Afghanistan, which is crucial for regional stability.

Taliban leadership has been willing to enter into negotiations with the Afghan government, which is a positive step towards resolving the conflict. However, both sides need to make more concrete efforts to reach a lasting peace. China's support can play a crucial role in this process.

By Hajjullah Zia

The invasion of Afghanistan was intended to topple the Taliban regime and to establish a democratic government in the country. However, the situation has turned out to be far more complex than expected. The Taliban, which had imposed an extreme and oppressive ideology on the people of Afghanistan, continues to pose a threat to the security of the region. This has led to a number of conflicts and challenges for the international community.

China's support to Afghanistan aligns with its policy of promoting regional cooperation and stability. The country has been active in promoting peace and stability in the region, and has played a role in facilitating talks between the Taliban and the Afghan government. Erdogan Revive Bid for Executive President: Turkey

ANKARA—Turkey could hold a referendum in 2016 on whether to change its constitution to set up a new presidential system, according to the country's President Recep Tayyip Erdogan. "We are looking forward to the day when the Turkish nation will complete its journey towards constitutional changes that would give the called Turkish president the authority to outlast his term," Mr. Erdogan said at a meeting in Ankara Monday. "We have already put plans to consult and conduct the referendum."

If the country's constitution was changed, Turkey would become a presidential-style democracy. Mr. Erdogan, 62 years old, has long been pushing for such constitutional changes that would give him the much-desired title of president for life. Turkey's current president, Abdullah Gul, 54, took office in 2007 but is serving a maximum of one 5-year term because the constitution bars presidents from serving consecutive terms. But Mr. Erdogan, the latest in a long line of Turkish politicians who have tried to outlast their term in office, is already planning for a presidency with an end date of his own choosing.

EU Plans to Tackle Throw-Away Economy

BRUSSELS—EU regulators plan to put pressure on companies to repair or reuse any three electronic devices, such as phones, leaving buildings, saying it makes little sense that interaction manuals need to be republished year after year, rather than just once. The European Commission said the "sustainable behavior" in the "throw-away society" actually means consumers throw away devices, such as cameras, that are still usable and "voluntary [device] disposability is foreseen for the [initial] draft." A draft of the Commission's proposal, released by the European Parliament, said that data and quality control rules for such materials as electronic devices and plants would be "adapted accordingly" to make electric automobiles "a viable option." The experts also said that the EU had to "beat the clock" and find a way to "adapt the rules" to the new material.

Sissi Visits US to Discuss Terror and Trade

LONDON—Egypt's president-elect Abdel Fattah el-Sisi said he would "encourage" himself to visit the U.S. to discuss counterterror and trade.

The diplomat, the former general who led the military coup that ousted Mohamed Mursi, said the visit was "inevitable" after his election. But the visit would be driven by "the times, the international problem, the threats and the current state of our region.

"You talk about two main issues in Egypt, which we have been discussing with the U.S. for a long time: stability and democracy, what we call political stability. What about their bureaucratic rules and the need for some reforms? We need some stability, some economic cooperation. The U.S. also needs stability in Africa.

The U.S. is a key partner for Egypt, and we need to work with the U.S. to achieve this stability.

German, French Raids Against Human Smuggling Networks

BRUSSELS—Germany and France launched coordinated raids against two interconnected human smuggling operations that have been operating in Europe, according to law enforcement officials. The German federal police said it had raided 90 properties in Germany and Russia, and seized about 50,000 euros ($67,000) in cash, along with other evidence including passports, computer discs and fingerprints. The French police said they had also seized about 500,000 euros in cash and 20,000 euros in Russian rubles.

"These raids were launched in coordination with the German authorities," said French Interior Minister Christophe Castaner. "These are not just the first steps in a new strategy, but the first steps in a new fight against the networks that are in charge of the flow of illegal migration."

The raids were part of a coordinated effort by European law enforcement agencies to target human smuggling networks.

Sweden Wants EU Help to Relocate Refugees

STOCKHOLM—Sweden will ask the European Commission to arrange for migrants to be moved from the Nordic countries to the U.K. and elsewhere. Swedish Prime Minister Stefan Lofven said he had been approached by the U.K. government about the possibility of having some of Sweden's refugees relocated to the U.K. Sweden has been under pressure to take in more refugees, and the U.K. has been working to reduce its own refugee numbers. Lofven said the Swedish government had agreed to the request in principle, although details had yet to be worked out.

NATO Tests Its Capabilities, and Wants Russia to Take Note

ZAGREB—NATO put its most famous炫耀: the military might of the nations it controls, on display Tuesday in a showpiece of its northern flank over the course of three days. The exercise, involving troops from the alliance's 30 members, is a test of the alliance's ability to move forces across borders to face a perceived threat from Russia.

The exercise, known as Trident Juncture, is the first time since the Cold War that NATO has conducted a large-scale exercise on the European continent. The exercise is a show of force to deter Russian aggression, and a test of the alliance's ability to respond to a perceived threat.

The exercise involves 30,000 troops, 100 aircraft, and 2,000 vehicles, and is designed to test the alliance's ability to respond to a perceived threat from Russia.

In 2016, NATO will conduct a similar exercise in the Baltic region, as well as in the Mediterranean and in Africa.
