Withholding Corruption: Stacked!

Afghanistan stands among the poorest countries of the world with more than 40 percent of its population living below or slightly above the poverty line, while still many of its citizens do not have access to basic necessities. The most recent report indicates that the government has not adequately addressed the issue of corruption which is among the main challenges facing the country.

Recent report by Transparency International's Global Corruption Barometer, which is based on a survey of 106 countries, ranks Afghanistan as one of the most corrupt countries in the world. The report shows that 75 percent of the respondents believe that corruption is widespread in government institutions.

However, the government has taken some initiatives to combat corruption in recent years. The Anti-Corruption and Transparency Commission (ATTAC) was established in 2004 to monitor and report on corruption in the country.

Despite these efforts, corruption remains a significant challenge in Afghanistan. The country has a lack of effective enforcement mechanisms and a lack of independence of the judiciary. The lack of rule of law and the weak judiciary have created an environment in which corruption can flourish.

In conclusion, the fight against corruption in Afghanistan is a long-term process that requires the active participation of all stakeholders. The government, civil society, and international partners must work together to create a more transparent and accountable society.
