Militants Persist in Sectarianism

By Hujaltullah Zia

A cording to reports, masked gunmen stormed four buses on a highway in Zabul province about 12 miles east of Delaram. They seized a group of civilians and shot dead six people, including three local leaders of the ruling National Islamic Movement of Afghanistan (Hizb-i-Islami) and a 12-year-old girl. The attack is believed to have been carried out by an unknown group of militants, likely affiliated with the Taliban, who have been active in the region for several years.

The attack comes amid increasing tensions between the Afghan government and tribal leaders in the area. The government has been trying to establish control over the region, which has been a haven for militants in recent years. The attack is likely to further escalate tensions and could have serious implications for the security situation in the area.

The government has consistently denied any involvement of foreign forces in the region and has been working to restore stability and security. However, the recent attack highlights the challenges faced by the government in this regard.
