US Must Address Waste, Fraud in Afghan Aid

KARUL - With Washington set to send billions of dollars in fresh aid to Afghanistan despite the military drawdown, the US official in charge of stability assistance programs said that "it's not too late" to address the fraud and mismanagement that has bedeviled the 14-year effort to rebuild the country.

The military intervention launched after the Sept. 11 attacks has cost over the United States $1 trillion, including some $110 billion in aid aimed at excluding one of the poorest, most violent and most corrupt countries on earth. To this day Afghanistan relies on foreign aid as it battles an increasingly potent Taliban insurgency.

But John Sopko, who has spent more than three years probing US-funded projects as the special investigative general for Afghanistan reconstruction (SIGAR), said the US government is partly to blame for the misused funds.

"What I'm identifying are not just Afghan or Afghan-related problems," he said on PBS.org.

Welfare of Masses Needs Prioritization

By Asmatyar

A present state narrative proposes their goal is to continue progamming and policies to ensure their welfare. Over the years, this nar-ergative has been presented as the dominant approach in many countries, including Afghanistan. The government has made significant efforts to improve the welfare of its citizens, but there are still many challenges to overcome. The government needs to work on a comprehensive strategy that addresses the needs of the people in a more holistic way.

The government needs to consider the welfare of all citizens, not just a select few. The government should focus on improving healthcare, education, and job opportunities. The government should also prioritize the needs of the elderly, children, and women. The government should work to reduce poverty levels and increase access to basic necessities like food and water.

In conclusion, the government needs to prioritize the welfare of every citizen to ensure a better future for Afghanistan.

Afghanistan and Environmental challenges

By Matiullah Kamran

A fghanistan is one of the most vulnerable and poorest countries in the world. It is affected by several environmental, ecotical, economic, and social factors, which are exacerbated by climate change. Afghanistan is home to some of the most diversified ecosystems in the world. The country is prone to droughts, floods, and landslides. These natural disasters have imposed significant challenges on the residents of Afghanistan.

The government of Afghanistan has taken several initiatives to address environmental issues. However, the effectiveness of these initiatives is questionable. The government needs to prioritize environmental protection and sustainability. The

US Aid

The US government has been accused of using its aid to bolster its own形象 and to support its strategic interests. Many recipients of US aid have complained about the conditions attached to the funding, which can be restrictive and often benefit American companies rather than the local population. The US has been accused of using aid as a tool to influence foreign governments and to advance its own agenda, sometimes at the expense of the recipient country's sovereignty. Many have criticized the US for using aid as a way to maintain control and influence in regions where it has strategic interests.

Kiev - Russia has begun to restrict coal supplies to Ukraine, Energy Minister Yuriy Prokopenko said on Thursday, in Kiev for a power Nakhodka of Russian-owned Energostroi, a company that supplies coal to one of the power plants in the region. The company has said it will stop coal sales to Ukraine by the end of the month. Prokopenko said he was working to find alternative supplies from other countries.

"Coal supplies have been restricted from Energostroi," he said. "We believe that we can increase coal production by 5% to 10% by the end of the year." He also said that the government was working on a plan to import coal from other countries.

Prokopenko said that the government was working on a plan to import coal from other countries to ensure the country's energy security. He said that the country needed to increase coal production by 5% to 10% by the end of the year to meet demand.

The move comes as Ukraine faces a severe power shortage due to the ongoing Russia-Ukraine conflict, which has disrupted energy supplies from Russia.

In a similar vein, the Russian Federal Energy Agency has also announced that it will increase coal production by 5% to 10% by the end of the year to meet demand.

Turkish President Called Putin after Su-24 Downing: Kremlin

NATO Split on Message to Send Georgia on Membership Hopes

Bishkek - Russian President Vladimir Putin has reportedly called on Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan to release detained Russian pilot Vadim Shishov.

"It is a very difficult situation," Putin told Erdogan on Monday, according to a report in the Turkish media.

The pilot was shot down on Friday in Syria and is now in a hospital in Turkey. Erdogan has said the pilot was injured and is being treated.

Shishov was shot down while flying a Russian Su-24 fighter jet on Sunday.

Russian jets have already targeted Turkey several times.

Several countries have expressed concern about the situation and have urged both sides to de-escalate.

Ghani Fires Kunduz NDS Chief

KABUL—As wide-spread chaos in the country continued to escalate, President Ashraf Ghani announced the dismissal of the NDS chief, MAJORT General Salim Alizada, over allegations of corruption and abuse of power.

The move, which was announced in a live televised interview on Saturday, is the latest in a series of high-profile dismissals and reshuffles in the Afghan security forces, which have been beleaguered by allegations of corruption and inefficiency.

According to reports, Alizada was dismissed after a series of investigations by the Independent Commission for the Investigation of Security Forces (ICISF) and the Ministry of Defense.

The ICISF, which was established in 2016, is responsible for investigating human rights abuses and corruption within the security forces.

Alizada, who had been in charge of the NDS since 2016, had been accused of using his position for personal gain and for fostering a culture of corruption within the agency.

The NDS, which is responsible for national security and intelligence operations, has been under scrutiny in recent weeks due to allegations of corruption and abuse of power.

The move comes as the country faces a critical period in its history, with the Taliban making significant gains on the battlefield and the United States considering a peace deal with the insurgents.

Ghani, who has faced widespread criticism for his handling of the security situation, has been under pressure to take decisive action to address the crisis.

The move is likely to be seen as a step in the right direction, but it remains to be seen whether it will be enough to stem the tide of the Taliban's advances.

KARZAI—The Taliban's latest offensive in the north of the country has put the government on the backfoot, and Ghani is under increasing pressure to take action.
