NATO, US Operations in Afghanistan Complete Failure

KABUL - Russian President's special envoy for Afghanistan, Zamir Kabulov has said that the US and NATO mission in Afghanistan has been a complete failure and the evaluation of the effectiveness of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) has been negative. The US and NATO mission in Afghanistan has been a complete failure, the Russian President's special envoy for Afghanistan, Zamir Kabulov, told TASS, in evaluating the efficacy of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) there.

200,000 Afghans Register in 27 EU States: IOM

BERLIN - Filled up with the worsening security and dwindling economic opportunities in their country, Afghans are flocking to Europe in numbers not seen even under the repressive Taliban regime. About 200,000 Afghan asylum seekers were registered in 27 European member states from January to December 2015, according to the International Organization for Migration.

More Troops May Be Needed in Afghanistan: Gen. Campbell

KABUL - The US and NATO military commander in Afghanistan may seek additional American troops to help local forces as they struggle to contain the Taliban insurgency, USA Today reported.

General John Campbell's interview with the newspaper comes as the security situation in Afghanistan has deteriorated to the second half of 2015, with an increase in insurgent attacks and higher casualties among both Taliban and national forces.

Already, President Barack Obama has backed out a pledge to pull out all but 1,000 troops, and in October he announced that 9,000 US forces would remain in Afghanistan until the end of 2016. Campbell said today he would ask the Obama administration to keep that higher number of troops in country as long as possible and suggested he might ask for more US personnel.

"I don't believe that we can accomplish the goals, unless the Afghan forces are doing it, and that's why I'm not sure there's much I can do," Campbell said.

The 9,000 US troops are scheduled to be drawn down to 5,000 by January 1, 2017.

"My intent would be to keep as many as I could, for as long as I could," Campbell said.

KARZAI - The Counter-Government Narcotics Justice Task Force (CTJTF) official said on Wednesday that the increase in drug production and trafficking in Afghanistan during 2015 is a matter of serious concern for the Afghan government.

According to the CTJF, at least 475 incidents related to drug trafficking and/or production in Afghanistan, 217 incidents related to drug production and 258 incidents related to drug trafficking in Afghanistan during 2015 is a matter of serious concern for the Afghan government.

Nangarhar: A New Hotbed of Insurgency

By Abdul Ahad Bahrami

The Nangarhar province has earned the stigma of being the new Taliban capital due to the growing number of Taliban government offices, causes by the "no-treason" policies of the Karzai government. This province is often referred to as "the Taliban's bastion". The reason behind this is the relationship between the Karzai government and the Taliban. The Karzai government has been accused of nominating winners for the province council, which has been the main source of the Taliban's operational bases. The Taliban have been able to establish a strong presence in the province due to the Karzai government's inability to effectively control the area.

The situation in Nangarhar has been exacerbated by the presence of local and national insurgent militias. These groups are often involved in a power struggle with the Taliban, with each group vying for control of the area. The Taliban, on the other hand, have been able to gain control of the province by providing security, infrastructure, and intelligence to the local militias, which has allowed them to effectively control the province.

The challenge for the Karzai government is to find a way to reconcile with the Taliban and other insurgent groups. This will require a shift in their policies towards a more inclusive governance framework. The Karzai government must also address the root causes of the insurgency, such as poverty and corruption, in order to prevent the spread of insurgency in the region.

US Warns About Resurgence of Al-Qaeda

WASHINGTON - As the White House increases its efforts against the Islamic militant group al-Qaeda, this week's visit to Kabul by President George W. Bush may be seen as a step toward reorganizing the training camps of al-Qaeda, The New York Times said.

Most of the facilities are no longer as large as they were during the Taliban era. But al-Qaeda, which has been linked to the September 11 attacks and to the recent bombing of Dubai, has not been completely eliminated. In fact, the United States and the United Nations intelligence agencies agree whether or not the group is still operating in Afghanistan.

Despite the September 11 attacks, al-Qaeda remains a threat to the region. Even though the United States has made significant progress in the war on terrorism, the group continues to pose a danger. The US military has been involved in several successful operations against al-Qaeda, but the group still remains active.

Over 1 Million Reach Europe: Sea: UNHCR

ANKARA - More than one million refugees and migrants have reached Europe by sea since the beginning of 2015, according to a new report by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR).

More than 80 percent of the Liberians recently arrived in Germany, with the majority on the island of Zanzibar, said.

About 60 percent traveled by boat from Libya to Europe. Most of the others, over 150,000, arrived in the Mediterranean region from Libya to Italy. The migrant crisis is Europe's worst since World War II. The number of people who have left their homes has increased vastly since 2013, when it was recorded at slightly more than 240,000. Increasing numbers of refugees and migrants take their chance aboard unlisted sea vessels. They do not hesitate to pay a human smuggler to reach Europe, the UNHCR said.

The vast majority of those attempting this dangerous journey continue to face national persecution, fleeing violence and persecution in their country of origin.

About 40 percent of those crossing the Mediterranean Sea are from Yemen, with 25 percent coming from Afghanistan, said.

The number of those who die or wash ashore is now at 5,750. The IOM’s figures reflect the ever-growing pressure on Europe.

The European Commission has warned that the situation is becoming critical.

The short-term, merit-based policy has already been adopted in many countries, including the United States, the United Kingdom, and Canada. The long-term approach is still under discussion.
